Details:

Whether you're between properties, renovating, or managing a staged business relocation, having access to reliable storage and warehousing changes what's possible with your move. Instead of being locked into a single, rigid moving day, storage gives you flexibility — and when it's handled by the same team managing your relocation, it keeps your belongings under continuous, professional care.

Monthly Storage for Longer-Term Needs

For moves that involve a genuine gap between leaving one property and settling into the next, monthly storage is the practical option. Capacity is generally available in tiers — around 40 cubic metres for larger households, office fit-outs, or retail stock, and smaller 20 cubic metre allocations for more compact storage needs. Pricing is structured on a fixed monthly basis, so you know exactly what the storage component of your move will cost each month it's needed.

Short-Term Storage for Quick Turnarounds

Not every storage need is long-term. Weekly storage is available for situations where you just need a short buffer — perhaps your settlement dates are a few days out of sync, or your new office fit-out is running slightly behind schedule. Short-term storage means you're not paying for, or committing to, more than the situation actually requires.

How Items Are Handled Going Into Storage

Storage is only as good as the packing behind it. Every item heading into a warehousing facility should be wrapped and boxed to the same standard as items going straight to a new address. Fragile pieces — glass, marble, artwork — need complete protective wrapping, not a partial job. High-value furniture, electronics, and appliances require full wrapping before storage, the same standard applied to items in direct transit.

Storage Insurance

Because your belongings may spend weeks or months in a facility rather than your own home, storage insurance is available as an added layer of protection for the duration they're held. It's a straightforward way to have extra peace of mind while items are out of your hands.

Business and Warehousing Applications

Storage and warehousing services aren't limited to household moves. Businesses relocating offices, retail stores, or warehouses often need short- to medium-term space to bridge the gap between vacating one site and being fully operational at the next. Having a moving partner who can offer both the transport and the storage side removes the need to coordinate multiple providers and reduces the number of times your equipment or stock changes hands.

A Trusted Partner for the Gap in Between

At Fragile Removals, storage isn't a bolt-on service — it's built into the same careful, documented process we apply to every move. Your belongings are wrapped, tracked, and protected whether they're travelling straight to a new address or spending time in secure storage first. If your move needs a storage solution, our team can talk you through the options and find the timeframe and capacity that fits your situation.
