Details:

Melbourne to Sydney is one of Australia's busiest interstate corridors — around 880 kilometres via the Hume Highway, and one of the most frequently run relocation routes in the country. That familiarity is a genuine advantage: experienced removalists know this road well.

What Drives the Cost

Pricing follows the standard interstate structure: a kilometre-based transport rate for a two-person crew and large truck, plus the volume of your household or business goods. Because this route is so well-travelled, most established interstate removalists can complete pickup and delivery within one to two days, which helps keep costs more predictable than longer or more remote corridors.

Door-to-Door Service

A genuine door-to-door service means your belongings are loaded once in Melbourne and unloaded once in Sydney — no depot transfers, no unnecessary handling. Given how often this route is run, ask your removalist how they sequence pickup and delivery to minimise time in transit.

What to Ask Before Booking

- Is your quote itemised, separating transport, packing and insurance? - Is the crew AFRA-accredited and police-checked, with no subcontractors handling any leg of the journey? - What packing support is available for fragile or high-value items — glass, marble, artwork, electronics?

Timing Your Move

The Hume Highway corridor can see seasonal congestion around public holidays and school terms, so booking a few weeks ahead — particularly around peak periods — helps secure your preferred date and crew.

Making the Most of a Well-Travelled Route

Because so many removalists run Melbourne-to-Sydney regularly, it's worth asking directly about their experience on this specific corridor: how they handle overnight security if the move spans more than a day, and how they document the condition of your goods at both ends of the journey.

Melbourne to Sydney is a substantial move, but it's also one of the more manageable interstate relocations available — with the right, AFRA-accredited team handling the details, it becomes one smooth, well-planned journey up the coast.
